For more than seven centuries the capital of the namesake Republic, Genoa is also known as la Superba, ("the Superb one") and Dominante dei mari ("the Seas Queen") due to its glorious past.

Overlooking the Ligurian Sea, its history is relative to the art of navigation and the trade. Its Porto Antico (old harbor) is the ancient part of the port of Genoa, which is still nowadays the most important in Italy, and one of the largest in the Mediterranean and in Europe.

City of heavy industry, especially the nautical one, Genoa in the past was considered part of the so-called industrial triangle. Today is a famous tourist, scientific and university center.
